Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1, 2, and 7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kvietok et al. (US 2003/0175148).

Kvietok et al. teaches a dispensing device 20 which includes an electrically driven actuator device for dispensing a volatile material. The invention of Kvietok et al. further includes a refill 22 which includes a reservoir containing a volatile liquid and which further includes a closure means 74 or 102 on the refill. A switch means associated with the dispensing device is adapted to engage or interact with the closure means when the dispensing device is appropriately assembled. See paragraph [0079]. The actuator may be a heater or a fan (paragraph [0081]) and the switch means may incorporate an RFID tag. See paragraph [0083]. Although not specifically disclosed by Kvietok et al., it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art that the RF transmission system of Kvietok et al. would have included an RF transmitter and receiver circuit and a metallic coil, as this is precisely what one would find in an inductively-coupled RF tag. Indeed, passive RFID tags by definition include a coiled antenna, which when exposed to radio waves from a reader will form a magnetic field.

The RFID tag draws power from the magnetic field, energizing the circuits in the tag thereby sending information encoded in the tag's memory. This type of RF tag is well-known in the art and would have been an obvious choice, if not inherent, in the invention of Kvietok et al..

Response to Arguments

3. Applicant's arguments filed 11 December 2008 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.
4. On page 4 of the Response, Applicant argues that the conductive label and electric circuit of Kvietok et al. have nothing in common with the instant invention which is directed at controlling the authenticity of refills that may be associated with the main device. However, it is noted that the apparatus claims, require no such method and in fact, only recite a known type of RFID tag on the refill unit. As Kvietok et al. discloses the claimed RFID tag, these claims have been met. As to the method claim (claim 7), the only process step in the claim is "providing a dispensing device according to claim 1 to an ambient environment." Again, as use of the Kvietok et al. device necessarily includes "providing a dispensing device according to claim 1 to an ambient environment," the claim limitation has been met. Moreover, it is noted that the RFID device of Kvietok et al. is capable of being used in the manner intended by applicant.

Conclusion

5. THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
